VICTORIA DOUKA-DOUKOPOULOU

Victoria Douka-Doukopoulou (GR, 1992) is a multidisciplinary artist and researcher. Her practice has been informed by her interests in media histories, environmental realities and care-full curiosity. Since 2016 she has been occupied as a researcher for Sonic Acts (Amsterdam,NL), a festival which reflects on the (ecological, technological, social, artistic) challenges in the age of the Anthropocene. In 2017 she initiated the experimental publication and distribution project oneacre.online that explores and critically evaluates visions and versions of power systems by tracing the politics and poetics of technological infrastructures.

Her artistic practice has been following the methodologies and traditions of expanded cinema, looking closely into networks and systems to locate entry points, to “expand the system” and allow possibilities for discovery of alternative instances and experiences. But rather than staying solemnly with video or film, attempting to apply this “expansive” methodology to other media like publications or digital objects, using those instances to create moments for media to entangle with other media presentations and spectatorships. Making films that require from the viewer the engagement of a book, books that allow the reader the participatory navigation of a website, and websites that demand the spectatorship of a traditional cinematic experience.

Thematically much of her work make uses of this “expansive” intermedia practices to assemble and communicate, a sensitivity towards noticing, an understanding, an education in attention. The works could be thought as gestures or nudges towards caring deeply and engaging mindfully as the world is full of potential knowledge sites. Possibly found in unconventional places like the side of the road, blending into the surrounding grey, tentatively "discovered" on page 44 of Volume 33 of Project and Site Description HKN; Appendix C, Boundaries and Coordinates - version August 15, 2019 (Word file). Of Human or more-than-human authorship, like the “HARMFUL/ TOXIC TO BE CAREFULLY DISPOSED” bin of the Eye Filmmuseum Archive or the 11 000 old hill that has always been island.

PROJECTS

- 2020 Becoming A Sentinel Species BAD Award Netherlands sisselmarietonn.com/project/becoming-a-sentinel-species Plastic pollution in the Earth's oceans has become a part of marine species' daily experience. These species act as sentinels, informing scientists who seek to understand the impacts of plastic in the field. Plastic pollution crisscrosses marine and terrestrial realms, and is likewise a part of the human experience. Nascent research indicates that tiny microplastic particles may also be entering the human "inner ocean" - the bloodstream. Becoming a Sentinel Species suggests an expanded awareness of our world and all its intertwined sentinels may lead to a reconnection with our shared deep past, enabling an exuberant multi-species coexistence on Earth. The human health impacts of microplastics are yet to be elucidated, but their presence in our bodies and surroundings is a potent reminder that we are not impenetrable entities, but rather fluid organisms - no more pure than the environments we co-create. We have, in a sense, always been sentinels.

Thematically oneacre.online first four commissioned publications place themselves in the online world of constant updates and refresh buttons that, as theorist Wendy Chun observes, “exist at the bleeding edge of obsolescence. We thus forever try to catch up, updating to remain the same”. The publications use the omnidirectional online terrain and actions that are native to it — such as refreshing, instantly available to edit, easily erasable, highlighting, copy-pasting and non linear navigation — to explore and critically evaluate visions and versions of power systems by tracing the politics of technological infrastructures.

The series showcased in December 2017 THE POETICS AND POLITICS OF ERASURE by Yun Lee, a multidisciplinary research paper on the aesthetics and politics of erasure. In March 2018, ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE NEVER HAS A HEADACHE by Karina Zavidova, a long-form about the fear of AI spread by the media, and the market of productivity- enhancing tools it has fuelled. In June 2018 RADIO, TECHNO, FOSSIL by Eline Benjaminssen & Sophie Dyer, the story of a radio-image as it traverses the bounds of the Earth’s surfaces, atmospheres and techno-geographies. And finally in September 2018, MEANING-SEEKING ANIMALS by Lisa van Casand, a subjective collection of a wide range of perspectives on the transfer of information.
