HAEVAN LEE

For me, art is attitude towards the life. and 'art is to connect between the visible world and the invisible world, the familiar world and unfamiliar world.' With the third eye. The third eye is my translation, view, attitude, fantasy.

My research explores the geopolitical landscape of border and buffer zone across the globe, in the form of a "painterly" study of such sites. Although South Korea is a peninsula surrounded by water, it can also be considered an island due to the northern land mass being largely inaccessible. I was born in the Dongsong area near the DMZ (Demilitarized Zone) and have always had a curiosity for unknown and unnamed spaces. Despite not being able to physically venture into those areas, I am still able to explore them by observing from afar, filling in the gaps with my imagination. The creativity born from something unknown is not just an individual experience, rather it is a movement that can be seen and shared across all of our society. In relation to the work so far, I observed and gathered many landscapes, including those of the DMZ, the area of civilian control zones in Korea and the Yalu River, the border between North Korea and China, and Eurasia. Having explored other cultures' borders, such as Asia, Europe, and North America, I investigated not only geopolitical borders but also various borders through subjects such as culture, race, media, and archaeology. I would like to unravel the thoughts about the landscapes I have experienced in various forms, such as drawings, paintings, objects, installations, videos, publications, and collaborations. It is an experiment on limitations. It is also a journey of observing and creating in an ever-changing environment.

EXHIBITIONS

2024 Positions : Soft Intimacies Stroom The Hague, Netherlands Positions: Soft Intimacies is a group exhibition by five artists from The Hague who work at the intersection of spirituality, ecology, cultural heritage, and oral history. Eugenie Boon, Yaïr Callender, Haevan Lee, Farah Rahman, and Amber Toorop invite visitors to explore the ambiguity of personal and collective ways of remembering. Their artistic practice is shaped by poetic reflections drawn from their personal experiences and backgrounds. In their work, the artists explore avenues for creating poetic stillness and, as a result, scope for reflection and vulnerability. They share intimate stories that are sometimes at the foreground in our collective consciousness, sometimes fading as fleeting shadows and sometimes deliberately tucked away. The works, which are playful, deepening, experimental yet vulnerable, offer different perspectives and invite speculation on other forms of coexistence. How can some childhood memories, anchored in feelings of uninhibitedness and joy, inspire us to remain hopeful? How do we deal with memories and stories that also generate feelings of shame and discomfort? How do we create room for this complexity and properly care for this knowledge, which has been passed down from generation to generation? The artists participating in Positions: Soft Intimacies continue to raise questions with their work and explore collective forms of remembering. This process also requires them to embrace complexity, friction, sadness, and joy. Positions: Soft Intimacies makes these layered experiences tangible and invites the audience to reflect and wonder.

We are inspecting the climate collapse from an elastic point of view, offering an alternative world and artistic mind space to forecast the future, based on the assumption that the majority of the human still care about the earth and each other. 2022 In Media Res Omstand Arnhem, Netherlands Omstand is a space for contemporary art. They organize a group exhibition with works by artists who live or work in the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany. This is a program from the IN MEDIA RES exhibition series, a series with a focus on artist with an experimental practice, with a lot of attention for art expressions that settle in the space. These include performance art, new media, space-filling installations and audio works. The foundation for this exhibition is a curious attitude towards everyday subjects and themes. Subject that everyone can find recognition in, such as rituals, lust, physical appearance and behaviour, or emotions such as empathy or disgust. The main idea behind this series is that artists are often best at visualizing these kinds of major themes.

2021 A scenic route to self Nest Den Haag, Netherlands Guest curator: Maria Rey-Lamslag Everyday our bodies move through structures and spaces that put limitations on them. Prescribed routes to follow. Expectations on how to behave. We meet physical and social boundaries that challenge our notions of self. The self. What is it? How close can one get to the 'true' self and how close can we get to other selves? How much can landscapes of histories, memories and imaginations facilitate a desire to connect to these inner beings? Or to what extent are they limiting decorum and structures themselves? This group exhibition of students from the Master Artistic Research of the KABK might encourage introspection and reflection upon these questions. The various works and performances provide insight into their research-driven practices. Several students explored the ways in which (imagined) natural scenes, marked by histories, reinforce or negate a sense of belonging; how they enable a form of shared experience. The researches show how memories can be comforting or traumatic; how songs and sounds, food and thoughts can mediate sexuality and intimacy. They investigate how to disclose and criticise systems of patriarchy and productivity that are still confidently passed on within families and societies. But also how artistic labour is valued and how artists and art audiences perceive each other. 'A Scenic Route to Self' invites you to experience how landscapes and people embody memories and how in our every move we take positions towards systems that were already there.

2021 Buffer zone SAGA Seoul, Republic of Korea Curated by Taehyun Kwon, Supported by Gangwon Foundation for Arts and Culture Having a buffer zone means that there are more than two sides that weigh on each other. A buffer zone is a space where the forces of both sides are relaxed, a space that does not belong to either. At the same time, it is also a thick boundary. A boundary zone that cannot be easily crossed, filled with tensions on both sides. I worked directly on seeing and drawing the Demilitarized Zone on the Korean Peninsula and the border area between North Korea and China, and other border areas in Eurasia, while imagining crossing that boundary, or entrusting myself to the fluctuating boundary. The buffer zone looks like an untouched space, like a painting. In fact, it is also home to many creatures that grow with incredible power. Human figures are rare in such buffer zones, but human-made figures do occasionally appear. Like colorful and striking triangles and squares geometric shapes, the artificial marks in the space indicate the areas where people from different territories cannot enter, such as Military installations, minefields, or lines that cannot be crossed. When a human sees it, there is a sudden tension, but the animals that live there walk leisurely or fly across. They jump between them regardless. In the Buffer Zone, you can detect the tension between the extremes that come together at this 'neutral' zone: a zone in between artificial and natural, or between images and the world, sometimes between different viewpoints, and even between different materials. In this project, multiple layers of boundary zones are piled up and cushioned here. Imagine a space-time where other forces remain intertwined without being dragged to one side of their extremities. Even what was thought to be a solid entity is understood here as a relationship between the powers that fluctuate from it and to it. Through my panoramic painting, you can feel the line between the taut tensions, or you can wander through the gaps unawared. Step into a space where nothing happens because it is full of energy, but where anything can happen because of it. saga.ooo/10-episode

The Gyeongui train line from Seoul Station would have stopped at Gaeseong, Pyongyang, Sinuiju, Dandong, and Beijing via the Dorasan Station in Paju, and it therefore feels like a natural step that Sinuiju and Dandong have been highlighted following the two preceding projects. 2020 Sun Kissed // Fog Off Quartair Den Haag, Netherlands Curator : Orlando Maaik Gowenberg "In a world where tyrant covid grabbed its power and is still ruling our lives, we were all forced to make a standstill in one way or another. Now one year after the first lockdown, we're getting the opportunity to work together again as a group on the cusp of Spring. It feels like a breath of fresh air. Within one week, with all the participants of the MA Masters Artistic Research of KABK, we created the project Sun Kissed // Fog Off. It works like a kaleidoscope and set of gems that share their energy wherever they are presented. We have embraced the restrictions of the pandemic, like not being able to touch or physically gather, and found a way to deal with obstructions. So we started from looking into the possibilities instead and turned those restrictions into ways of presenting the artworks in ways that fit and connect to this specific moment in time. Questions of time and space became important in creating the right relations during the collaborations and between works. What does it mean to present a sculpture in physical space and on the internet? How can they get a physical sense of the works when seeing an image of, for instance, a painting? How does the audience perceive live performance on their laptops at home? And how do we deal with time zones and having colleagues missing out on physical meetings because they cannot be in The Hague? Sun Kissed // Fog Off expands from Korea through Colombia and through the internet to all corners of the globe and digital realms.

values, political values, and artistic values collide, step by step. In the present age, past histories are repeated all over the earth and new situations are unfolding. Protests, wars, discrimination, violence, epidemics, border closures, etc. For artists, their experiences make them constantly reflect on how they relate reality to their past historical experiences and what values they should pursue in the future. Living in this society, we could try to understand political, philosophical, historical, and impersonal values, and at the same time seek freedom and value through art.

2022 DOPA+The Cosmic Race Book dopa Haevan Lee, Minseok Chi, Ji Yoon Ahn, Daniel Monroy Cuevas, Goeun Choi, Rubén Romero, Elizabeth Medina Taboada Seoul, Republic of Korea adocs.co/books/dopa-project-the-cosmic-race/ Through this project, three artists, an architect, a curator and critics from Korea and Mexico share their own interpretations of convergence and transformation of cultures. Each person's reference for imagination and interpretation stems from different sources, such as the element of Buddhist doctrine and shifting building footprints of the Gyeongbokgung Palace in Korea. The main concept, "Cosmic Race" comes from the book, La raza cósmica written in 1925 by Jose Vasconcelos, a Mexican philosopher, politician, and an educator. Vasconcelos's "raza cósmica" refers to the majority race of Latin America, Meztizo, which translates to transcendental being. He saw that the Meztizo, born of an Indigenous and an European heritage, transcends the existing race classification and represents a superior agglomeration of races that overcome conflicts and division. Although it is hard to see eye to eye with his theory today that hints at racial superiority, we examine the intriguing questions that he raises regarding the futuristic perspectives of the agglomeration of races. Vasconcelos' essay derives from the collision of two opposite cultures; the ruling class and the subordinate class, the indigenous culture and the foreign culture. The essay contains his vision of a universal culture, where various cultures merge. He argues for cultural assimilation, an agglomeration beyond the biological dimension. Ironically, in his process of pursuing racial hybridity, the various boundaries and borders inherent in the tumultuous modernization of Mexico were revealed. We took interest in this point of confusion and conflict that hybrid cultures have rather created. We use Vasconcelos's concept of cosmic race as a channel to re-assess the problems we face today. A team of six artists, architect, writer and curator exhibit the complexity of "Cosmic Race" throughout the exhibition. There will be opportunities for performances and gatherings where various perspectives of "race", "universality", "exclusivity", and "autonomy" will be shared. The aim of this project is not simply to juxtapose the colonial histories that non-western countries experience. Instead, it aims to transcend the locality of art in both Korea and Mexico by imagining the cosmic existence and envisioning how art can operate in a cosmic society.
